Banner Advertising B. Vincent,2024-12-04 Since its humble beginnings centuries ago, banner advertising has come a long way. That is correct... centuries ;) If you flip through an old newspaper or magazine from the American colonial era, you'll see rectangular banner advertisements marketing everything from beer to stockings, replete with a main image, carefully chosen brand colors, a slogan or unique selling proposition, and even a call-to-action! Of all, we're not here to debate vintage print banner advertisements for fashionable powdered wigs or cutting-edge wooden dentures. (but it's worth noting how long the forerunners of today's digital banner advertising have existed). We're going to explore current digital banner advertising in all their beauty in this guide. To begin, what are they? What are banner advertisements? In essence, banner advertising are clickable, tappable pictures that encourage site visitors to purchase, learn about, or receive something in exchange for a click-through. These advertisements can appear everywhere and are frequently found within and around the content of many websites, including the header section of a forum page, the sidebar of a blog or news site, or even crammed in between the paragraphs of a news story. These banner advertisements come in a variety of shapes and sizes (usually variants on the trusty old rectangle) and can be static images (.jpg,.png, or.gif) or animated images (.gif or Flash). Recently, some firms have begun utilizing Rich Media banner adverts that perform all sorts of bizarre things, such as zipping an automobile across the screen in front of the item you were reading. And these advertisements are not going away anytime soon. Banner ads continue to account for approximately 34% of all online advertising spending, second only to search engine marketing (SEM). Therefore, they definitely work, as they have existed for hundreds of years and corporations spend a fortune on them each year.

Google Scholar and More William Miller, Rita Pellen, 2014-01-02 In only a few years, Google has become an authoritative provider of multiple products which have changed the digital information landscape. This book discusses how libraries can go beyond Google's basic search and Scholar functions to expand services for their patrons. Respected authorities reveal the expanding variety of new Google applications developed in the past few years, many of which have not received wide attention and are as yet not often used in libraries. Applications explored include Google Co-op, Google News, Google Docs & Spreadsheets, Google Calendar, and Google Talk. This book also discusses different important aspects of the company's expansion of functions, such as the failure of the Google Answers experiment, the broad variety of free Google applications that librarians can use to collaborate, and the success of Google's Blogger, among others. A helpful chronology of Google's growth is provided, as well as comparative analyses between various Google functions and other functions that are currently available. The book is extensively referenced. This book is an invaluable resource for academic librarians, public librarians, school librarians, library science faculty, and special librarians. This book was published as a special issue of the Journal of Library Administration.

Media Imagery and Political Choice Laura Ann Granka,2011 The research presented in this manuscript contrasts a text-only and graphical display of news, to assess the personal and environmental factors affecting news preferences. This research was conducted in two stages. First, an online experiment and survey of 1,000 participants assessed the effects of political attitudes, personal demographics, and visual cues on news selection behaviors. Second, an eyetracking study evaluated the ocular and cognitive behaviors associated with the processing of each news display. Analyses specifically examined which factors influence (i) an individual's preferences for hard and soft news, (ii) an individual's preferences for specific news sources, and (iii) how stable or susceptible to change these preferences are over time. Results indicate that visual design, political attitudes, and personal demographics all affect the type of news and source selected. Specifically, a graphical news layout encourages the selection of soft news categories, though this is moderated by education. A graphical layout also enables more repeat selections to the same source. Furthermore, eyetracking shows that a graphical news format produces lower levels of attention and cognitive processing. Broader implications for the future of news display and news acquisition are discussed.
